

E-safety: Click clever, Click safe

For a few years now the internet has filled us with laughs and information, however deep inside are people who use the internet as bait to lure users into their trap. This is a leaflet on safety while on the internet but still having fun like you should be.

Social Media

Social Media is an amazing way of finding new friends around the globe. Sadly younger users are irresponsible while on social media by putting up inappropriate photographs of themselves and their friends. Don't be like them! If you do when you are younger you might not be able to get a job when you are older as a result of this you will not be able to afford food or water to survive.

Online Gaming

Playing against and with people from across the globe! Who would say no to that?! Although it may be buckets of fun there are strangers and dangerous people out there so be really careful! Games such as Moshi Monsters and Movie Star Planet include people like this. You may be thinking this leaflet is just for children who don't know about internet safety. Well it isn't. It is also about innocent teens and adults who are being victimised by these people. Here are some quick guidelines to help you when and if it happens to you: Never share YOUR password; Never share YOUR name; Never share YOUR age and most importantly save YOUR life by never meeting up with strangers.

Mobile Phone

The joys of having your own mobile phone is fantastic. From watching videos to texting hilarious emoji's is all a blast but when it goes too far... Stop! If you send someone an unkind message even to someone you don't like is known as cyber bullying therefore no-one will want to be your friend at all. Let's say you have your friends number and she is a joker like you .One day she sends a picture of her in a dress that you don't like. In a mean and hurtful way you tell her the truth. This makes her really upset and this results in her blocking you which you don't understand because she once did it to you. What do you do?

Thank you for reading this leaflet I hope you learned that if you,
